Decision Gave Satisfaction, but the Spectators Wanted a Finish.

For the third time in their pugilistic careers, Jack Clifford of this city and Perry Queenan of Scattle fought a twenty-round draw at the Salt Lake Theater last night. In sixty rounds of milling neither man has been able to land a knockout punch or recure sufficlent adventage to warrant a decision in his favor.

The mill last night was an interest ing one, and those who attended re-While the fight was not one of th kind that sets the spectators wild with enthusiasm, yet there were enough fast mix-ups to keep those who attended pretty well thrilled. Both men worked hard and seemed to try hard for a knockout, but without success. On two occasions Ciliford had his opponent a trifle to the bad, but the Salt Lake fighter did not appear to realize the success. his advantage and neglected to force matters. In the early part of the bat-tle Queenan rapped Clifford several that seemed to worry the local lad, but at that did not have him in distress.

the latter had planted a hard swing in the second round, the spectators roared with delight. However, the Helper youth braced up in the closing rounds and once had the Denverite on Queer street. Matters were about even at the close and Bean called the fight a draw. Muldocon Cyclone and two other gentlemen of color indulged in a free-for-all for a few minutes that was very amusing. The Muldocon soon had his brothers to the bad and the bout was stopped by the referee.

The third preliminary between "Billy" Arnold and Tommy Snailhan of San Francisco ended abruptly in the Most of those who saw the mill last night are of the opinion that Referee Bean's decision was a just one. There were a few who thought that the local scrapper had a shade the best of the argument, but there were an equal number who insisted that the Seattle fighter was the better of the two. This San Francisco ended abruptly in the second round, when Arnold broke his arm. Both boys displayed considerable is nothing unusual and happens at every go that is at all close. However, the majority backed up the referee's ability, and but for the accident would probably have put up a good go. It was nearly 10 o'clock when the principals entered the ring. Clifford was first with his seconds, Thompson and Price, but had scarcely taken his seat when Queenan climbed through the ropes, followed by his counselors, Teddy Murphy and "Battling" Nelson. There was a little delay after the men entered the ring, and after the custom-ary challenges had been read, Bean in-structed the fighters to begin opera-

Clifford Was Nervous.

In the early part of the battle Clifford appeared to be nervous. He sailed after his opponent from the start, but although he forced the fighting was very careful not to leave any tender spots open to the wicked wallop conwas apparently not at all worried, but he was evidently acquainted with the stiff punch of the local scrapper, for he kept well covered.

As the go progressed Chinera seemed to gain confidence, and was quite willing to stand up and swap purches with Queenan. In the fifth round the men went at it hammer and tongs and Clifford went to the mat. He took the count of nine, and immediately upon getting up he handed Queenan a stiff left swing to the jaw that caused the Seattle boxer to stagger. The ef-fect was only momentary, however, and Queenan was strong when the round ended.

Both Began to Weaken.

In the seventh and eighth rounds both men began to weaken, and from that time on their blows were much lighter. Queenan seemed to be a trifle more distressed than his opponent, but occasionally he would sall in with such vigor that many persons believed he had been stalling.

In the ninth round many of Queen-an's blows went wide and the fighter from the north seemed to be fast wasting away. Toward the close of the round Clifford put a straight left to the chin that sent his opponent's head back and staggered him.

In the five following rounds there were occasional mixes, which resulted in little damage to either man. How the End Came.

In the closing rounds both men went in for business, and some flerce ex-changes followed with honors about even. Queenan had entirely recovered from the ill effects of the seventeenth and eighteenth rounds, and had an even break with the local man. When the gong announced the end of the twentieth round both men were plugging away, but their blows were too weak to do much damage. Referee Bean announced that the fight was a
